

Love and marriage

It is natural to marry when we are in love. But I don't think love is everything in marriage. We may love lots of people throughout our lives, but we usually have one marriage. What does that mean? That love alone is not sufficient for marriage. When we date, love may be everything. But when it comes to marriage, we should be realistic. If not, we can't get over how fantastic being in love feels, and we are doomed to disappointment.

Useful Expressions:

1. You can give without loving, but you can't love without giving.
2. There are three things most men love but never understand: females, girls, and women.

Questions for discussion:

1. What is the passage all about?
2. Do you agree with the author's ideas? Why or why not?
3. What is marriage for you?
4. Is it really necessary for people to get married?
