

FORGIVENESS

What is the exact definition of forgiveness? Do you easily forgive the person who wronged at you? To grant forgiveness to the person who has wronged us is one of the most difficult things to do. Especially if the person who put you to terrible pain is very close to your heart, that you would think that he will be the last person to hurt you. What will you do then? It is said through definition that forgiveness is an act of excusing a mistake or an offense or it is a compassionate feelings that support a willingness to forgive. What if the person who's asking for your forgiveness is the one whom you've never thought will hurt you and a person you've treated as a part of your life. What will you do then? Will you forgive that person? Maybe yes, maybe not... Sometimes the only hindrance of not forgiving is the fact that you were hurt and that you were disappointed by his actions. Often times, we neglect or rather we tend to forget all the good things he has done for you because of such action whom you consider as an "immortal sin". Its just like a very clean and white handkerchief and suddenly, just a drop of a black ink will make it dirty. Most hurt person will just notice the black drop of ink instead of the whiteness and cleanliness of the object.

Whatever the reasons you have in mind; consider listening to his sides first before you make a concluding action to your relationship with him. It's better to forgive than forget and waste all the precious moments you've been together. Anyways, it will just make your relationship more intact.

Questions:

1. What can you say about the short article?
2. Have you experienced being hurt by the person who is very dear to you? How did you feel about it?
3. What did you do then? Did you forgive the person?
4. How is your relationship with the said person now?
5. What is real forgiveness in your opinion?